This report, the fourth in the market segmentation report series on CAD software, is a two-year study of the U.S. CAD software market. The report focuses on the current market size and trends and provides forecasts and market estimates from 2014 through 2018. This market segmentation report focuses on the major market segments by type (desktop, mobile, web, and enterprise), application (civil engineering, architecture and engineering, mechanical, and others), and geography (the U.S. and Canada). Total addressable market, 2013–2018 This segmentation report also reports on the total addressable market. This market includes the total users of desktop CAD and software tools and the total users of mobile and web-based CAD. Desktop CAD/Design Software Market Share, 2012–2018 This segmentation report reports desktop market share. Desktop CAD software tools include desktop CAD and Drafting and design tools such as Inventor, Creo, SolidWorks, and others. Desktop CAD market share in the U.S. was 79.7% in 2013. Desktop CAD market share in Canada was 60.1% in 2013. Desktop CAD market share by type is shown in Figure 1. All data on desktop CAD market share for 2012, 2013, and 2014 was collected from survey respondents of market research firms. SmartPhone CAD/Design Software Market Share, 2012–2018 This segmentation report reports smart phone market share. Smart phones are mobile phones that are capable of running a mobile app. Smart phones are now used to take photos, record videos, surf the Internet, read books, and listen to music. All of these activities can be done on a smart phone while a person is on the go. Smart phones allow people to work on projects while they are mobile. Smart phone market share by type is shown in Figure 2. Smart phone market share in the U.S. was 17.5% in 2013. Smart phone market share in Canada was 14.6% in 2013. Open Autocad. Load a new drawing. Click on options on the right and then on Use Autodesk Toolbar. NOTE: Autodesk has no documentation available. Hence the guide here! A: There is no such tool, but you can always use the first screenshot in the link that you have provided to get the full tool bar. It's very easy to use and the available commands are a bit more powerful than the one you have mentioned. First, I'd like to express my greatest thanks to the kind folks over at Tyler Durden (Bloomberg Businessweek) for getting me this interview with Dacre himself, Ian Masters. Secondly, you need to know that I also won't have access to any decent software (and apparently neither do Bloomberg Businessweek) so I'll have to try and do this all on a very low end laptop. So, with that out of the way, let's get on with the interview. Q: How do you define success? A: There's many forms of success. You could be happy in your career. You could be happy with your family. You can be happy at work and have great achievements. I think the biggest thing is that you can be happy with yourself, whatever the external circumstances. That's what I aim for. Q: You've always had an editor's eye for detail. Do you feel that's a skill that's passed down in your family, or do you think it comes from your own experience? A: I grew up with my father, who was a crime journalist. He used to spend the nights editing. He worked in the Fleet Street days and he used to come home at 8pm or 9pm, sit down and write for two or three hours. I grew up with that kind of discipline. So it was in the house from a very young age. It's something I've carried on. Q: Do you think there are writers who, early on, have a natural ear for language and have the chops to get things across? A: I do. I think it comes from the tradition that you have to be disciplined with the form, the grammar, the punctuation, the spelling. Q: When did you first realise you wanted to be a writer? A: I

Just after the previous update I received many emails, good feedback and great reviews about the build I worked on for months. Most of them pointed out that the achievement of that goal wasn't easy, but I'm very proud with the result! As you can see on this build I made a lot of changes
