As shown in FIG. 1, conveyors 10 are supported by plates 12 or rollers which ride along rollers 14. The rollers 14 are oriented to move in a first direction 16 and in a second, opposite direction 18. Springs 20 provide a constant force to the plates 12 (or rollers 14) to prevent slippage and constantly urge the plates (or rollers) 14 in a first direction (as indicated by the arrow 22). The rollers 14 are supported on a surface of the conveyor 10 and the plates 12 (or rollers 14) are usually supported by the rollers 14. To energize the rollers (14) in the opposite direction 18, either a mechanical mechanism is used to move the rollers (14) or a powered operator 24 energizes the rollers (14) through mechanical linkages 26. The linkages 26 force the rollers (14) to rotate counterclockwise. Once the rollers (14) are energized, the rollers (14) push on the surface of the conveyor 10 causing the conveyor to move in the opposite direction (as indicated by the arrow 18). The conveyor 10 moves the products 28 from one location to another. Typical designs include rollers energized by power through a cable or belt or mechanical linkages controlled by motors that direct belts against rollers. Often, conveyors are operated in very cold conditions, such as on ice or even in snowy conditions. Under cold conditions, the rollers 14 in a typical conveyor will be frozen to the conveyor surfaces. The springs 20 cannot force rollers 14 to roll, thus the rollers (14) will not rotate. With no rotation, the rollers 14 cannot move the conveyor. In addition, the drive cables become frozen in place. If the rollers are not held in place on the conveyor surface by the drive cables, the rollers slip past the drive mechanism. In addition, the rollers 14 may become stopped due to snow 3a67dffeec

I would like to get my notifications, email, and other items out of my "Personal" OneDrive account.
