We described the clinical and radiological features in 30 patients with Niemann-Pick disease type C. Thirty patients with Niemann-Pick disease were identified with clinical, radiological and biochemical evaluation. The control group consisted of 40 age-matched healthy children with an average of 13 years of age, but without other diseases. Radiological findings were not different between patients and control subjects in the absence of specific biochemical evidence. Facial features included coarse facies, failure to thrive and vesicular cough. Also ataxia, restlessness, oesophageal breathing, dysarthria and hepatosplenomegaly were frequently encountered. Rib and hip anomalies were only found in patients with short stature. A hallmark of our patients was a classical presenting presentation of extrapulmonary and central nervous system involvement. In the 30 patients with Niemann-Pick disease Type C, there was a homozygous mutation in the NPC1 gene, located on the chromosomal band 12p13.2, which is a well-known mutation in the Niemann-Pick Type C disease.
